Hoyt Shields Speaks At FFA Conference On War Effort Food Needs

Seaman Hoyt Shields, who made an outstanding F. F. A. record in the LaFayette High school and was a former state officer in F. F. A., on furlough the latter part of August attended the state conference at Jackson Lake, Ga., and spoke to the convention. Report of his appearance at the conference as reported by the Atlanta Constitution is as follows:

"A slim, sun-bronzed boy, in Navy seaman's uniform, stood before 300 vocational agriculture teachers in the lakeshore auditorium here and made a dramatic appeal for increased food production on Georgia farms next year.

"He was Hoyt Shields, former state officer of the Future Farmers of America, who sold his purebred Hereford cattle herd, left his Walker county home and enlisted in the Navy when America was drawn into the war. He was on leave after a tour of duty at Pearl Harbor and came here to mingle with his high school teachers at their three-day war work conference at the FFA camp.

"If I could tell you what I have seen out there in the Pacific; if I could make you realize how important food is to our war effort, I'm sure you would go back home determined to do everything possible to increase food and fiber production next year," he said.

"We have the best-fed Navy and Army in the world, and we must keep it that way," he said.

"The training vocational agriculture students receive in farm implement and machinery repair not only helps in food and feed crop production, but gives them mechanical skills that will make them better sailors and soldiers when the times comes for them to go into the armed services," Hoyt, said.

"Before adjournment at noon today, the conference under the leadership of T. G. Walters, state supervisor of agricultural education, in the State Department of Education, revised the program for the coming school year to meet new needs. It was decided to give emphasis to courses which will make the greatest contribution to the war effort—food production and conservation, farm mechanics and community services."
